

Northwell Health and Instacart partner to expand access to nutritious food for patients and staff

18 July 2024 | News

Programs support maternal health, youth nutrition education and employee wellness

Programs support maternal health, youth nutrition education and employee wellness

Northwell Health, New York's largest health system, and Instacart, the leading grocery technology company in North America, announced a partnership through the Instacart Health initiative that leverages Instacart's platform and products to expand access to nutritious food, inspire sustainable healthy choices, and scale food as health programs to reach diverse Northwell communities.

"Raising health is more than the care Northwell provides in our hospitals and doctors' offices. It's also about how we raise the people in our communities and how we raise our expectations of what health can be, which is why Northwell contributes more than $2 billion in community benefit annually," said Debbie Salas-Lopez, MD, MPH senior vice president of Northwell's Office of Community Wellness and Population Health. "The collaboration with Instacart is part of our comprehensive community health effort and will provide tools and resources to access nutritious foods for our staff, patients and communities."

Through the partnership, Northwell will use Instacart Health tools to support unique programs that address social determinants of health including access to healthy food and transportation.

The first program to launch integrates Instacart Health tools into Northwell's Center for Maternal Health Maternal Outcomes and Morbidity Collaborative (MOMS) so that moms-to-be who are food insecure have improved access to fresh and nutritious food. Northwell Health is particularly focused on addressing maternal health in Black and Brown communities that have long-standing disparities in maternal care. Using Instacart Health Fresh Funds, category-specific online grocery stipends, and Northwell's Healthy Choices Storefront on Instacart, Northwell is providing moms-to-be with nutrition guidance and support during their pregnancies.