Brewer's latest investment strengthens local economy and brewing excellence with multimillion-dollar commitment

Anheuser-Busch America's leading brewer and maker of Michelob ULTRA, Busch Light, Budweiser and Bud Light, announced a new $16 million investment in its Los Angeles brewery. Over the past 5 years, Anheuser-Busch has invested nearly $2 billion in its facilities across the country to help create and sustain jobs and drive economic prosperity in the communities where it operates and its employees call home.

Brendan Whitworth, CEO of Anheuser-Busch, stated, "Investing in the communities where our people live and work is part of who we are. At Anheuser-Busch, we've been producing high quality, great tasting products for generations, and through continued investments in our facilities like our Los Angeles brewery, we're not only improving our capabilities but also contributing to the prosperity of the communities we serve."

Key Highlights of the Investment:

Expansion of packaging capabilities for the company's "beyond beer" brands like Cutwater and NUTRL, including a variety of packaging

Increased production capacity for 25-ounce cans to meet increasing consumer demand

Facility upgrades to enhance water conservation and reduce boiler emissions
