

Singapore's Selfie Coffee to London's selfieccino

04 December 2017 | News

London has opened Europe's first selfie cappuccino cafe, where customers can sip on their own face.

London has opened Europe's first selfie cappuccino cafe, where customers can sip on their own face.

London has opened Europe's first selfie cappuccino cafe, where customers can sip on their own face.

Following the viral sensation that was the Selfie Coffee cafe in Singapore, which digitally prints out customers' headshots and selfies on foamed milk and whipped cream, London has opened its own version of the "selfieccino" cafe.

At The Tea Terrace on Oxford Street, customers can take their selfie-snapping, coffee-shop habit to a new level, thanks to a special high-tech printer which can recreate images on a frothy cappuccino in less than 30 seconds.

Ordering is as simple as sending a selfie image via messaging app to the barista.

The "selfieccino" coffee is the latest trend to take Instagram and the Internet by storm.

Meanwhile, The Tea Terrace is trying to trademark the name "selfieccino" as their own, and will sell the service at their House of Fraser location on Oxford Street. It will then be rolled out to its two other House of Fraser locations in London and Surrey.